Market segmentation for RunaAI involves dividing the target market into distinct groups of consumers who share similar characteristics and needs. The segmentation strategy aims to identify and prioritize segments that are most likely to benefit from RunaAI's financial education and management solutions. Several key segmentation criteria are considered:

Demographic Segmentation: This involves categorizing the target market based on demographic factors such as age, income, education level, occupation, and marital status. For example, RunaAI may target young professionals, college students, or families with children who are seeking to improve their financial literacy and manage their finances more effectively.

Psychographic Segmentation: This entails segmenting the market based on lifestyle, values, attitudes, interests, and behaviors. RunaAI may target segments of individuals who are proactive about their financial well-being, value education and self-improvement, and seek convenient and accessible solutions for managing their finances.

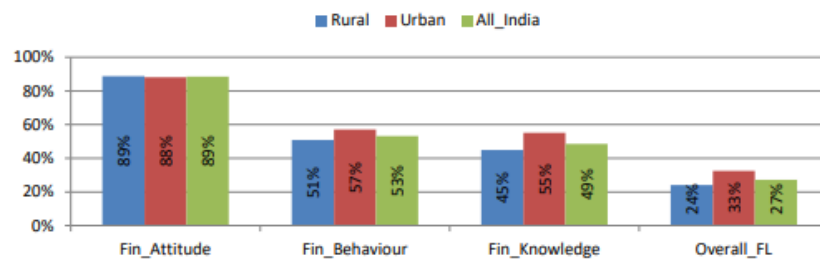

Behavioral Segmentation: This involves dividing the market based on purchasing behavior, usage patterns, brand loyalty, and decision-making processes. RunaAI may target segments of users who are actively seeking financial education, regularly seek advice from financial experts, or are motivated to take control of their finances but lack the necessary knowledge and tools.

Geographic Segmentation: This entails dividing the market based on geographic factors such as location, region, urban or rural areas, and cultural differences. While RunaAI's services are accessible nationwide through its online platform, specific geographic areas with higher concentrations of target segments may be prioritized for targeted marketing efforts or localized content.

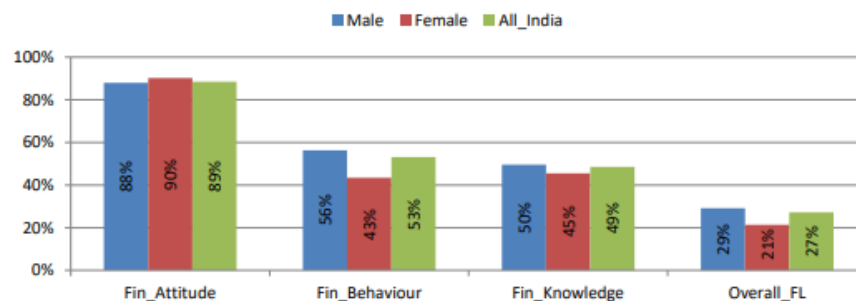

Market Analysis:

The following images from the National Centre for Financial Education (NCFE) survey and the S&P Global Financial Literacy Survey illustrate the current state of financial literacy in India. The NCFE survey reveals that only 24% of the Indian population is financially literate, highlighting a significant gap in financial education. Similarly, the S&P Global Financial Literacy Survey ranks India 73rd out of 144 countries, with a financial literacy score of just 24%.
